

The Cricketer
Synopsis

The Cricketer is the inspired story of Raji, a poor young Pakistani boy whose Hindu religion makes him a target for abuse and ridicule in the largely Muslim community he is part of. What makes him stand out is his amazing athleticism and his superior abilities in all positions of his beloved sport of cricket. However, those talents increase exponentially to the supernatural realm when he saves the statues of a Hindu god from marauding Islamic terrorists who are bent on destroying the temple in which he stands. Raji's ability for throwing the cricket ball becomes nothing less than phenomenal after the god bestows special powers upon him to show his appreciation.

A sports agent from the United States heard about this young teen's throwing ability and had to see for himself. When he got a look at the power, speed and accuracy of young Raji he is blown away – he'd never seen anything like it. Raji is recruited for MLB having no idea that he would have to turn to the Hindu god for another favor – a huge one – in the early days of his baseball career.
