

The Reunion
Brief Synopsis

Heather, a beautiful Vietnamese-American girl, has enjoyed a happy and wonderful life in the United States. She was adopted by a wealthy family in Pennsylvania and had every advantage that any girl could dream of – designer clothes, fabulous trips, fancy cars, the best schools. But Heather has a pain in her heart that she cannot ignore. She knows she was adopted but doesn't know the details. She loves her American parents and has no resentment toward them. All she knows about her early life in Vietnam is that her mother gave her to an adoption agency in Saigon when she was four. She has a very faint memory of her life in Vietnam. She remembers three women—an older woman who was probably her grandmother, her mother and a young woman who may have been her sister or aunt. As time passes by, her quest to learn the circumstances of her adoption and to feel a connection to her first family only intensifies. She has been digging for information and learned that she was the only child in a family of at least four children who was given up for adoption. Why was she chosen?! She longs to learn the truth no matter what it is. A friend and local proprietor of the salon she frequents surprises her with something totally unexpected. He is able to locate her family and arranges to bring her mother and two of her siblings to the US for a reunion. Heather, who was called Hahn in Vietnam, is thrilled to meet them and be with them. When she asks her mother the burning question of why she was chosen to be given away, she is shocked by the answer but it explains why her mother had to take the action she did. After her reunion, Heather now has the happiness of two worlds and two families—her adoptive family who she loves and appreciates and her birth family who she loves and with whom she finally feels the connection to the legacy of her birthright that she had so longed for.
